Panha Chheng is the cofounder and CEO of Medyear, which he started in 2012. While consulting at Kaiser Permanente, Panha developed a strong belief that changing the way we interact with our healthcare systems could save money and lives every year.

Before starting Medyear, Panha was as a strategy leader at Deloitte serving organizations such as Hewlett Packard, Intel, Johnson & Johnson, and the United States Department of Homeland Security. Working with Homeland Security landed him the Secretary's Award for helping to secure the nation's maritime industry.

Inspired by the potential for technological innovation in the public sector, he served as a data analyst for Barack Obama's 2008 Presidential campaign. As part of the Wisconsin data team, he helped pioneer the use of Big Data analytics to organize a political campaign.

After the campaign, he worked on large-scale Microsoft software implementations in China. His work in China birthed the idea for Medyear. Today, Medyear is elevating the healthcare experience for everyone.
